“Without the high-functioning team we have in place, I wouldn’t be able to personally perform well,” Jimerson said. “The firm is built to provide cost-effective legal solutions in the state of Florida for generations to come, providing a platform for all my employees and hopefully their children and their children’s children.”

Jimerson credits his personal success to good old-fashioned hard work.

“I’ve never been afraid to give up good when I can go for great,” he said. “I’ve always had a lot of pleasure in my life doing things that people said I couldn’t do. And I think it’s essential for what I do to develop trusted relationships with clients and colleagues.”

The past year was a good year for Jimerson as he favorably resolved or won at least five high-profile, high-stake, $10 million-plus cases.

The firm selects a charity every month to donate to. His own community involvement includes the Jacksonville Public Education Fund, the Rotary Club of Jacksonville, the Jacksonville Bar Association's board of governors, the Northeast Florida Builders Association board and more.
